

A Global Problem

Counterfeit products are an issue for all branded manufacturers, especially bearings. They exist within all geographical markets, and industrial segments and for all types of mechanical components.

Counterfeit products are usually produced at a low-cost and low-quality, and are not well-developed and tested for product reliability. They are illegally labelled and marketed with a reputable brand, placed in packaging that appears identical to genuine packaging used by the brand owner.

Counterfeit products are not easily identified, and unsuspecting customers tend to purchase these products at the same price as genuine products. Most importantly, these customers face serious risks as the products may cause machinery breakdowns, costly production stoppages and injuries to people.
